Strengthening Our Bonds This High Holiday Season

To return to synagogue is to return home to the source of our spiritual nourishment and to the embrace of our community.

By Rabbi Cantor Russell G. Jayne

Leo & Goldie Sheftel Rabbinical Chair | Norman & Beulah Martin Cantorial Chair

As the season of the High Holidays approaches, we prepare ourselves for a sacred journey of return. The Days of Awe invite us to engage in teshuvah, to turn inward in personal reflection, upward toward the Divine, the ground of all being, and outward toward one another. This process is not only about individual renewal, but about strengthening the bonds that connect us to our community, to our people, and to our sacred tradition. For generations, the synagogue has been the beating heart of Jewish life. It is here that we gather to pray, to learn, and to draw strength from one another. During these Days of Awe and return, when Jews around the world assemble in synagogues large and small, we affirm that our identity is not only personal but collective. To return to synagogue is to return home to the source of our spiritual nourishment and to the embrace of our community.

This year, the call to deepen our Jewish identity and strengthen our ties to one another continues to feel especially urgent. We are living in a time when Jewish communities face profound challenges, both here and around the globe. Additionally, our hearts also turn toward Israel, which remains, and always will remain the center of our people's story and our collective concern. The well-being of Israel is not separate from our own. It is an expression of our shared destiny as Am Yisrael. When we pray for peace, for strength, and for renewal in the year ahead, our prayers must also include Israel and all who dwell within her.

The liturgy of the High Holidays reminds us that we stand before God not as isolated individuals, but as part of the community of the people Israel. When we recite the Vidui, the confessional prayers, we do so in the plural, "We have sinned." Our tradition teaches that our fates are intertwined, that our responsibilities are shared, and that the wellbeing of one Jew is bound to the wellbeing of all. Supporting Israel, affirming Jewish life everywhere, and strengthening our local synagogue community are all part of this sacred responsibility. As you prepare your heart for Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, I invite you to consider what it means to return: to return to prayer and spiritual development, to return to your synagogue, and to return to the shared destiny of our people in every place and in every moment. Let us enter this new year with a renewed sense of belonging, a deeper connection to our tradition, and a firm commitment to stand in solidarity with our people, in all the places that our journeys have taken us in this world.

May the sound of the shofar awaken in us the courage to live with purpose, the strength to support one another, and the faith to envision a year of blessing, renewal, and peace for ourselves, for Israel, and for the entire Jewish people.

Returning Together This High Holiday Season

The spirit of connection doesn't end when the shofar blasts—it's only the beginning.

By Jennifer Girvitz

Executive Director, Beth Tzedec Congregation

As the High Holidays approach, I always find myself reflecting on what it means to be part of a Jewish community. For many of us, this season is not only about prayer and tradition, but also about reconnecting—with our heritage, with our families, and with one another. There's a special energy that fills our building during Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur: the sanctuary buzzing with anticipation, the sound of familiar melodies carrying through the halls, and the simple joy of seeing old friends and welcoming new faces.

The High Holidays are a time of return. We return to the synagogue, perhaps after a summer away or after many months of busy schedules. We return to our spiritual practices, carving out time for introspection, repentance, and renewal. And most importantly, we return to one another. The act of gathering together—sitting side by side in services, wishing each other shanah tovah in the lobby, sharing meals and stories—is what transforms these days from ritual into something much deeper: a shared experience of belonging.

As always, I'm especially excited that our younger members will also have meaningful opportunities to engage. During Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, children are invited to join our special programs downstairs, where they'll enjoy age-appropriate activities, music, and stories that bring the themes of the season to life. Parents must register their children in advance using the sign-up form here, so we can ensure a smooth and welcoming experience for everyone. It's another way of making sure the High Holidays are truly a celebration for the whole family.

Of course, the spirit of connection doesn't end when the shofar blasts at the conclusion of Yom Kippur. In fact, it's only the beginning. The rhythm of Jewish life carries us forward into Sukkot, Simchat Torah, and the many programs, classes, and celebrations that fill our calendar throughout the year. These moments of learning, singing, and socializing are the threads that weave our community together. They remind us that Judaism isn't only about the holiest days on the calendar—it's about the weekly and seasonal connections that sustain us.

It is my personal wish this year that more of our members join us regularly for Shabbat services. There is something profoundly grounding about gathering each week to pray, sing, and share in community. Whether you come every week or only occasionally, Shabbat offers a pause from the rush of daily life and a chance to reconnect with yourself, your family, and your congregation. I truly believe that the joy and warmth of these weekly gatherings deepen the experience of the High Holidays, and I hope you'll consider making them a more regular part of your year.

I often hear from members that what they value most about our congregation is this feeling of connection. It might be the friend who greets you with a smile every time you walk through the doors. It might be watching your children learn, play, and grow in Shul School. It might be sharing a meal at a Family Shabbat Dinner, or participating in a thoughtful discussion at the popular Beth Tzedec Book Club. Whatever form it takes, community is the heartbeat of synagogue life.

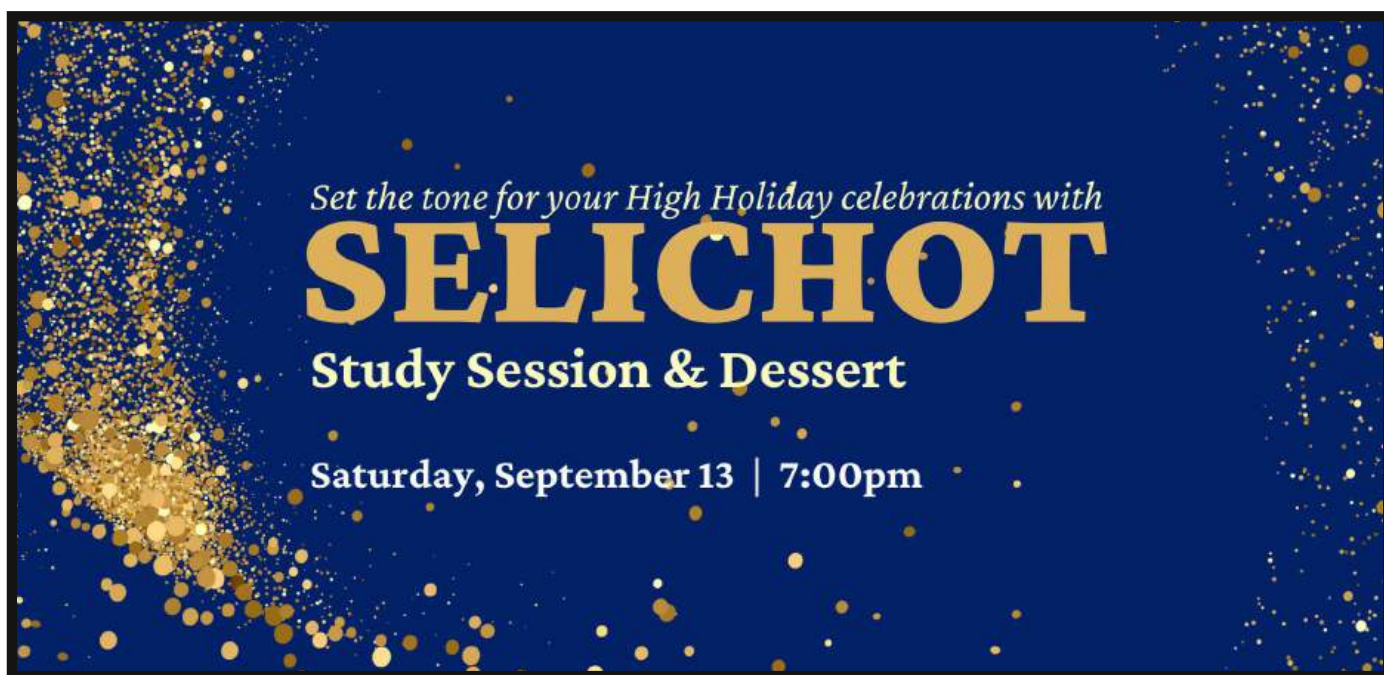

Membership plays a vital role in making this possible. Your support ensures that we can continue to provide meaningful services during the High Holidays and throughout the year. It allows us to welcome guest speakers, offer engaging programs for all ages, and maintain a space that is vibrant, inclusive, and responsive to the needs of our members. When you renew your membership, you're not just paying dues—you're investing in the future of our community. You're helping us create a place where Jewish life flourishes and where everyone feels they belong.

As we enter this season of renewal, I invite you to take part in all that our congregation has to offer. Join us for services, bring your family to a program, or volunteer your time and talents. The more each of us participates, the stronger and more meaningful our community becomes.

On behalf of our staff and leadership, I wish you a sweet and healthy New Year. May this season of reflection bring clarity, may this season of prayer bring peace, and may this season of community bring joy. Together, we will step into 5786 with gratitude for the year behind us and hope for the year ahead.

Shanah tovah u'metukah!
